

WILLIE PETERSON IS A GOOD THING.

Helped Julien D. Hayne to the Extent of Nineteen Hundred.

THEN GOT THE COLD SHOULDER.

Experience in Worthless Drafts.
Drafts on Nevada Bank Returned Dishonored—Hayne's Creditors Mourn His Departure.

It appears from recent developments that Julien D. Hayne was a great deal more mixed in his financial matters than was generally supposed. That he did not make money in his venture as editor of the Hawaiian was well known to persons familiar with Hayne, though there are many who believed his story to the effect that he was subsidized by parties in the East. His record in the United States is practically unknown, though persons here have been in correspondence with those who Hayne mentioned as being on intimate terms with in the hopes that something might be learned of the man's career. Up to the time of his departure nothing authentic had been learned of Mr. Hayne.

It is known that he deposited comfortable sums of money in a local banking house, but almost immediately drew against them. This money, it is said, came from the proceeds of the sale of certain investments held by Mrs. Hayne from the estate of her first husband. During the past few months her demands upon the estate were such that the trustees found it necessary to limit her drawings and sale of property to the extent of the will.

Prior to Hayne's departure for the Coast, a few weeks ago, he settled his numerous bills with drafts on the Nevada Bank of San Francisco. In all the amount of the drafts was about $500. Of this about $1500 was for cash advanced by Willie Peterson, a young man with whom Hayne had numerous dealings. Peterson does a little money lending business in connection with his duty as typewriter, and it is supposed that his loans to Hayne were for the usual consideration. Just how much Mr. Peterson is out by his transaction is not stated. The most glaring error made by Hayne in accepting a $500 bonus from a Chinese firm to bind a bargain for the purchase of a rice plantation on this island. Hayne told the owners that he had left a draft for the purchase price of the plantation and the money would be paid as soon as returns were received from San Francisco. This together with most of the other drafts given by Mr. Hayne were returned marked "no funds."

This is not the first instance of Hayne's forgetfulness in his banking affairs. When he went East with Mrs. Hayne a year ago, Mrs. Hayne's son was left behind at the home on the hill. Mr. Larnack of W. W. Dimond's volunteered to look after the boy and the house during Hayne's absence. Hayne gave him a check for $200 telling him that he would keep him supplied during his absence. Mr. Larnack presented the check at the bank and was informed that there were no funds. Mr. Larnack gave up housekeeping shortly after this and the boy went to live with T. J. Higgins. It was just before his departure on this trip that he invited members of the press to dine with him at the Hawaiian Hotel and a few responded. It was a nice dinner, well served in the private room and without wines. Hayne paid the bill amounting to $17 by check. In due time it was presented through Macfarlane & Co. to the bank and returned marked "no funds." It was believed by Macfarlane & Co. to be forgetfulness on Hayne's part and nothing was said; the check was paid on his return.

Another instance is reported from California. Hayne is said to have procured clothing and coin to the amount of $400 from a fashionable tailoring firm and settled by a draft on a Honolulu bank. The draft was returned unpaid, but Hayne was not bothered. A few weeks later the head of the firm passed through on his way to Australia and called on Hayne regarding a settlement. He told him there must be a mistake and he would look into it. When the man was on the wharf waiting for the steamer to sail Hayne stepped up and assured him it was all right, that he had fixed it at the bank. Before the steamer sailed the man telephoned to the bank and learned that nothing had been done. Mr. Hayne was evidently thoughtless as to his financial matters.
